Are you spending your kitchen dollars wisely?

In the competitive retail environment it can be easy to mistake 'cheap' for 'value'. But it's important to keep in mind they aren't the same thing, especially when it comes to a long-term purchase like a custom-made kitchen.

Ask yourself these questions:

- Is it manufactured locally? Local manufacturers must meet Australian standards and certifications, which means that when you buy locally you'll have peace of mind the kitchen you choose will be made from quality product that's built to last. You'll also receive the friendly, personal service you'd expect from locals, and you'll also be helping sustain the local economy.
- Are the products certified? Many imported kitchens are made from product that does not meet Australian standards. When you buy locally, you can be certain your kitchen is being made from material that meets (and usually beats) these standards.
- Is it made from sustainable building products? Reducing the carbon footprint of the building industry is vital as we move into the future so it makes sense to check whether your kitchen is being made from environmentally-sustainable products.
- Are you paying for quality? Nothing is cheap if it isn't built to last.

Valley Kitchens is proud to be a local manufacturer and always chooses suppliers whose commitment to Australian-made, quality and a sustainable future matches our own.
